BEFORE making the coupon, 130 pounds of skin and bones! What a rundown wreck! He had 10-inch pectoral arms — a flat 34 inch chest. Truly a pathetic case of weakness before he mailed me this coupon!

AFTER

AFTER Weider Training! What a Change! What a Build! 300 pounds — a mountain of mighty muscles, loaded with Herculean 15-inch arms, magnificent 45-inch chest and shoulders — a real wonder! Another dream come true!

The world's best built men are your instructors! They show you the exercises that will build your arms, chest, shoulders and waist, twice as fast as you ever thought possible!

CLARENCE ROSS
"Mr. America"
Tells you how he built his muscles The Weider Way.

REG LEWIS
"Mr. Universe"
Tells you how he built his giant strength and power.

DOUG STROHL
"Mr. California"

LEO ROBERT
"World's Best Built Man"
Lets you into all the secret exercises of the champions.

JUST 15 MINUTES TO THAT RUGGED, DYNAMIC, HE-MAN BUILD YOU ALWAYS WANTED!

Give me 15 minutes right in the privacy of your own home and I will prove to you that in half the time and with twice the ease, in just a few minutes daily, I will, through my TRIPLE-PROGRESSION COURSE, wrap inches of steel muscles to your pipe stem arms, pack your chest with power and size, give you like-guard shoulders, dynamic, speedy athletic legs — add jet-charged strength to every muscle in your body. I don't care if you're short or tall, skinny or fat, office-worker, laborer, school-boy, or businessman, I must make a new virile he-man out of you, and also help you build "inner strength" that will give you the virile look that women admire and men envy. What I did for Andre Lepine, Jack Delinger, Ray Schaffer and other "Mr. Americas" winners and thousands of weaklings — I can do for you! Yes, I can now you join a Real He-Man.

THE $10,000 CHALLENGE

only Joe Weider dares to make! I guarantee to show you how to add twice as much muscle — triple your power — gain more weight twice as fast through my system of training than you could through any other method, and in HALF THE TIME! I challenge any other physical instructor in the world who teaches through the mails, to accept my challenge!

BAD BRIDGE

"I can't wear the pale blue dress to the dance," protested Helen Egan to her husband, Bill. "Jane and Frank were with us at the other affair. They are going to this one. And you know how Jane is when it comes to talking behind your back! I saw a wonderful dress in Merchant's. Only fifty dollars. Be a good husband and get it for me."

They had only been married for a year and both were very happy. But if they only could have looked into the future. Then Helen would never have wanted that dress, nor would Bill have agreed to get it for her.

"If it means so much to my darling wife," he smiled. "Then you can buy it."

She gave him a big hug and kiss. Then asked the natural question,

"Where will you get the money?"

"I can work this Saturday," he explained.

"Jim wants me to be his partner on the painting job. Just one day's work to paint the underside of the main girder on the Outway Bridge."

Helen had gotten used to the fact that her husband was a painter who specialized on "high altitude jobs." He made good money and she accepted the fact that every business had its peculiar risks. So she thought nothing of it when he called up Jim on the phone and got a verbal o.k. for the job.

On that Saturday morning, Jim picked up Bill with his truck. He told Helen the news.

"Elaine has been bothering me so I told her I would take her to the dance. We all ought to have a good time there. They are having Ben Bernie and his band."

They checked in with the Major Contractor, Mr. Walter Gilsey. He then drove with them to the spot. A small metal ladder leads to a wooden scaffolding which was swung underneath the main girder of the bridge.

"We can bring the paint down together," suggested Jim. "We will save time."

Together they climbed down the ladder and then walked onto the narrow wooden scaffolding. Overhead could be heard the rumble of the passing cars.

"We forgot the two brushes," said Jim. "You stay here and prepare the paint, I'll go back for the brushes."

He turned left and walked carefully to the end of the scaffolding. Then he got onto the ladder. No sooner had he set foot onto the bridge when he heard a strange noise. The ladder tore loose from its mooring, and crashed down into the water below bringing with it part of the scaffolding.

"I left Bill behind," Jim managed to tell Mr. Gilsey who rushed over to the railing. "Guess he never had a chance."

Then they heard a faint shout and peeked down through part of an open grating on the bridge. Bill was holding on to a rope and a piece of board.

"Hold tight," shouted Mr. Gilsey. "We'll get you up in a few minutes."

It was much easier to say that than to put it into effect. Six patrol cars and two emergency trucks rushed to the scene. Captain Wilson of the Emergency squad quickly sized up the situation.

"You could rip up the metal gratings but that wouldn't help much," he told the startled men. "You have six inches of solid steel protecting the top of that girder. If you try to cut through with a torch you might burn the rope, and it would take so long that he couldn't hold on and would fall below."

"Is there any way of stretching a safety net below?" asked one of the patrolman.

"Can we use a helicopter?" suggested Mr. Gilsey. "I know they have rescued men caught in tight positions with that kind of a plane."

"Couldn't use it here," sighed Captain Wilston. "The plane would smash trying to get up against the underpart of the girder. See if we can drop some strong nylon lines to reinforce the rope to which he is holding."

They set up a broadcasting unit and this enabled Bill to hear what was being said. Somebody mentioned they should get his wife.

"She will encourage him and he needs it in this tight situation."

They ripped up twenty feet of mesh surface and found they were stuck. No way of getting the nylon line down to Bill. He was closing his eyes and praying. For the slight swaying motion was beginning to get him dizzy.

"We must do something," shouted Jim. "I can't stand by and let my best friend die. How much longer do you think he can hold onto the rope? Swing a rope with me over the side of the bridge. Then swing me back and forth. Maybe I can grab hold of him."

The idea seemed worth trying. So a rope with a small chair was set up. Jim got into it and they lowered him over the side of the bridge. A small microphone was attached to his coat so he could give orders.

"Five feet more rope," he would say: "Start swinging me to the left."

Then he gave the orders to bring him back to the bridge which was quickly done. Captain Wilston wanted to know what went wrong with the idea.

"If you play out too much line, you swing me far underneath him. He would have to jump and I would have to catch him. That's impossible. If you play out too little line, you can't swing me into position. And it seems as though there is no happy medium to get me into the right position."

By this time a squad car had brought Helen Egan to the bridge. She had dried her tears and was told to do her best to encourage her husband.

"Keep on holding on that rope, Bill," she pleaded. "See if you can work your way up to the girder."

"I can't go up," he replied weakly. "My hands are tiring and burning. Isn't there something that can be done? How much longer do you think I can hold on?"

Meanwhile two groups of men with torches were burning through a section of the bridge. The idea was to be able to lower somebody down who would then try to grab hold of Bill. The Chief Engineer had been summoned. He was directing the operation. Then he called a halt to the work.

"We have to burn through three girders. They carry the weight from the main girder. The bridge will become unsafe. You have stopped traffic going south. We will now have to stop traffic in the other direction. This is a risky thing to do. A man's life is at stake. If anything goes wrong, the entire section of this bridge can plunge down with all of us. What do I do now?"

"You have to save my husband," cried Helen. "You can't let him die. Something must be done!"

"We will go ahead with our work," said the Chief Engineer. "But I doubt if we can get to him in time. Let's not kid ourselves. If he can hold on for another half hour, that's about the limit of his endurance."

"If only there were some kind of a platform you could bring up from below for him," pleaded Helen. "Why can't they do that?"

Something clicked in the mind of Captain Wilston. A platform you could bring from below up? He rushed over to his car and soon made radio contact with the person who could help him. He explained the situation and then got an o.k. He rushed back to the microphone and spoke his encouraging message to Bill.

"The United States Navy is coming to the rescue. Just hold on for about twenty minutes more. They are sending a flying platform to get you down."

The message made little sense to Bill. He found it hard to breath, and he was feeling terribly tired. He gritted his teeth and dug his fingers tighter into the rope. He opened his eyes as he heard a strange noise. A round flying platform with jets underneath was slowly coming into position under him. A sailor was at the controls. Then he felt his feet touch it.

"Take it easy, bud," said the sailor. "I'll land you right on top of the bridge."

There were cheers as the United States Navy's flying platform carried out its successful mission of mercy. Helen cried and Bill managed to grin a bit.

"I didn't get a chance to paint the girder, darling."

They checked his hands and bandaged both of them. They would be o.k. in two weeks. He insisted on going home. And at six that night the phone rang. Helen answered it and her eyes almost popped out as she repeated the message to Bill:

"The dance was called off. Ben Bernie couldn't keep the date."
